THE BREWS OF BINGHAMTON

PLUS
Binghamton is a place that’s different. Built by historic innovators and fueled by a new class of creative visionaries, the Binghamton communities are filled with rich history and unique experiences.

We’re not just a destination. We’re an ongoing story you can be a part of. We’re not just a vacation. We’re a city to be explored.

History is a big part of the experience here, but not in the museum sense. BING is not a collection of artifacts or a reflection of “the way things were.”

BING represents the way things are. Now.

It’s true that history has been both generous and unkind here in the three cornerstone communities that make up Greater Binghamton. A new generation is embracing the gifts of the past, reimagining faded spaces, reviving culture and reinventing what a visit to Binghamton is.

This is a place, after all, where industrial ingenuity produced more than cigars, shoes or computers.

These are the kinds of communities where a punch clock manufacturer becomes a part of the world’s largest technology company, a piano and organ maker pioneers virtual reality or a creative kid leaps ahead of his time to create one of the most iconic television programs in history.

This has always been fertile ground for forward-thinking. And the bones, the story, help continue that tradition.

Binghamton is the place where two major rivers – the Chenango and Susquehanna – meet, which was a key feature of its birth. The ideas began flowing from there.

The 97-mile Chenango Canal was the first of its kind in the country, built shortly after the famed Erie and responsible for a few new techniques that revolutionized waterway construction.

Binghamton, with its watery connection to the Erie Canal and rail service to New York City, quickly grew into the “Valley of Opportunity” in the mid- to late 1800s.

Factories brought a flood of blue-collar immigrants as well as blue bloods who hung the “Parlor City” moniker on the town in reference to their elaborate estates. Binghamton, Endicott and Johnson City – the “Triple Cities” – sustained economic prosperity for more than a century, producing plenty of modern treasures in the process.

These are gifts like the impressive architecture sponsored by Willis Kilmer, one of the America’s wealthiest men in his day. Henry B. Endicott and George F. Johnson of the Endicott-Johnson Shoe Co. essentially built every aspect of their communities then named them – Endicott and Johnson City – for themselves. Two of the four companies – International Time Recording and Bundy Manufacturing – that would become International Business Machines (IBM) are Greater Binghamton originals that kept people and ideas coming to the area for decades.

It’s true they all went away. And for a long time, we didn’t want to talk about it. But, now the tone of the conversation has changed.

Now, BING is something to see again – in art galleries, at restaurants, outdoors. It’s a place to shop, eat, drink, enjoy and appreciate thanks to the current characters driving a new arch in the Binghamton story.

You can stand at Confluence Park and marvel at the rivers. You can walk down the former Chenango Canal – State Street – and see some of the most creative art in the country on what is nicknamed Artists’ Row.

On Washington Street, you can grab a taco in an old auto shop. Just a little ways further, the busy aura of the second largest cigar producer in the country still pulses at the Lost Dog Cafe.

Everything is close. It’s basically 10 minutes to everywhere in the Triple Cities. And from world-class performances and professional sports to fine dining and signature spiedies sandwiches, it’s incredibly affordable.

It’s true this is a blue-collar town. And it’s that heritage that makes the culture so unique.

When immigrants flocked to the factories, they brought their culinary traditions and cultural tastes with them. Like that innovative spirit, those never left.

People like Johnson built parks, theaters and even houses to keep his diverse workforce humming. Legendary IBM leader Thomas J. Watson continued that tradition with recreational amenities like the company residence and training center that is now the site of the Traditions at the Glen Resort.

It was this convergence of ideas and people that inspired citizens like Rod Serling to create “The Twilight Zone” and Ed Link of the family-owned Link Piano and Organ Co. to engineer the first flight simulator, considered a forefather to virtual reality.

It’s this kind of vision making BING worthy of a visit today, whether uncovering hidden gems on Antique Row or tapping into your own creative side at a ceramic bar that happens to live in a 150-year-old canal-era warehouse. In Endicott’s Little Italy, you can eat in what could easily be the setting for a mobster flick. At Johnson City’s Firehouse Stage, you can experience an intimate cabaret performance destined for national prominence.

Then go pick some apples. Or visit one of the biggest Internet sensations of the recent past. Ride an antique carousel.

Just walking around town or among the scenic outdoors that surround us will amaze and entertain.

No longer the Valley of Opportunity nor the Parlor City, the modern name for our main character might be the City of __________.

That’s because you decide.

Binghamton is a place that’s different, an eclectic location where a creative class of forward-thinkers embraces the roots as a destination for innovators.

We challenge you to take your own journey, make your own discoveries and write your own chapter. We invite you to be part of our story.
he hard-working communities that’s made Greater Binghamton great have long been equally enthusiastic about the arts and culture here. We’re happy to share some of our best with you.

The Tri-Cities Opera has been a cultural staple in Greater Binghamton for more than seven decades. Recognized as one of the elite public universities in the nation, Binghamton University brings world-class musicians, art and events to the region.

Binghamton’s First Friday Art Walks each month have developed into a tradition over the past decade as thousands of locals and visitors alike marvel at local masterpieces around town after hours.

In the theaters and on the streets, great performances and pieces are waiting to be discovered around every corner.
The dusty floors and rusty rebar poking out of holes in the ceiling don’t tell the Goodwill Theatre story. Nor does it tell the Binghamton story.

Because, like Binghamton and neighboring Johnson City, the story is very much in manuscript.

There’s the beginning set in the “Valley of Opportunity,” as the area was once known. There’s the “Parlor City” character introduced as prosperity grew for the first half of the 20th century. There’s the antagonistic exit of industry.

Then there’s the rebirth helmed by a new class of creative entrepreneurs and artists.

They embrace the fertile soil sown by the forward-thinkers of yesteryear – the innovative forefathers who not only created prosperity, but supported the people that made it possible with plenty of artistic amenities.

The Goodwill Theatre Inc. upholds a remarkable tradition to share the arts with the community, through both performance and programming.

“Everyone is willing to let things grow. Things don’t stay stagnant here,” The Goodwill Theatre Inc. CEO Naima Kradjian says. “It may be something that lives a certain life and it’s over – and that’s OK. Because it spawns new activity and new ideas.”

A former actress and artist in Manhattan, Kradjian came to Greater Binghamton some 30 years ago. She jumped right into the local arts scene as an organizer of “First Night Binghamton.”

“First Night was a way to get to know artists in the community. It opened my eyes to the incredible richness here,” Kradjian says. “I got to work with arts educators, fine artists and performers; bring in outside performers; and inspire local artists to do more.

“That propelled me into seeing what other things were available,” she says.

She built on those connections to found The Goodwill Theatre Inc. The organization had no true home in the beginning, hosting its earliest programs in the parking lot. Eventually, they acquired the dilapidated Goodwill Theatre in a tax sale. Like so many others revitalizing Greater Binghamton, they saw the potential and acted with the support of the community.

Kradjian’s organization is in the midst of a massive renovation of the Goodwill Theatre, a project years in the making. In the meantime, the Firehouse Stage next door – named for its former function as a civil service – is the main performance space.

“We are far enough away from New York, from the critics, to be a safe space,” Kradjian says. “We get a lot of artists that tour the Northeast. We’re somewhere they can try new things.”

This experimental performance fits nicely with the exceptional amenities Greater Binghamton has in the way of the arts. The Tri-Cities Opera has been a mainstay for more than 70 years. Binghamton is home to its own philharmonic and numerous community theater companies like the Summer Savoyards and SRO Productions.

“We’re a small town with big-city amenities. That’s really an amazing combination because you have the natural beauty, the affordability and the safety,” Kradjian says. “It’s not a complicated place to visit, yet you have all those things here.”
As a kid, John Brunelli would walk the streets of his hometown and peer into the dirty windows of old factories, imagining the place at its peak.

It was this sense of wonder and curiosity about the stories behind Binghamton’s better days that inspired he and his brother Anthony to convert an old warehouse into one of the region’s premier art spaces.

“There’s a certain architectural integrity to Binghamton that my brother and I saw and always admired,” Brunelli says.

It allowed them to see potential in the 1800s structure that is now home to Anthony Brunelli Fine Arts, where John Brunelli is gallery director. Back in the early 2000s, State Street was pretty much a neglected section of town.

Some 15 years later, Artists’ Row is filled with galleries, restaurants, cafes and boutiques.

“It wasn’t about knowing there was potential for a scene. It was about creating a scene,” Brunelli says. “These rebels in the art world, they don’t look for potential, they create it.”

Art has a way of revitalizing areas like this slice of Binghamton. It starts with budget-conscious artists who look for large, cheap spaces – like old factories and warehouses – to create in. That builds galleries, galleries draw people, people attract businesses to accommodate them.

“The galleries become a part of that and then eventually, others follow ... boutiques, restaurants, cafes. You have to support that social scene,” Brunelli says. “This past decade in Binghamton – it’s what we always dreamed of and it’s just going to get better.”

First Friday Art Walks have become a social staple downtown, drawing thousands for after-hours strolls. Galleries and businesses stay open a little later, vendors set up shop and music performances provide a soundtrack to what by all accounts is a heck of a night out.

“So many artists say they’ve never had an opening like they’ve had in Binghamton,” Brunelli says. “They might get a couple dozen people to show up at an opening in New York City. Here, it’s thousands.”

Tens of thousands in the case of the annual LUMA Festival each September. Not only is the projection art display a huge draw, it speaks to the community roots of Binghamton.

“This town has a very interesting and unique lineage and part of my role as a gallery owner is to help share that story through the arts,” Brunelli says.

The hum of factories may be faded from our landscape, but revitalized Greater Binghamton buzzes with tons of shopping, dining and nightlife. Let’s start at the bar, where craft beer connoisseurs can cozy up to handcrafted pints exclusive to the brewpubs of Greater Binghamton.

A century of industry drew many great cultures to the area, which is reflected in the world-class and world-famous fare you find in BING today. Get authentic Irish grub at any number of pubs, grab an Eastern European dish or hit the pits, where grill masters are sizzling up our renowned spiedie sandwiches.

Shop around in Greater Binghamton and you’re bound to find some great buys to take back from your trip. Take a walk down Main Street or around the mall. Follow the vintage streetlights down Antique Row, an eclectic collection of more than 30 dealers on Clinton Street near downtown Binghamton, which also offers a variety of boutiques, restaurants and more.
CREATIVE RESTAURANTEURS ARE TAKING OVER DOWNTOWN BINGHAMTON

It’s a classic example of the new Binghamton story.

Daniel Sharp was walking down Washington Street when something caught his eye. It wasn’t the most beautiful sight on the mostly revitalized block – a long-vacant, much-neglected auto shop. But, Sharp was somehow inspired ... and maybe a little hungry.

Because the only fixing going on in that garage now is plates. Patrons park themselves next to light fixtures made of old wheels, a Cadillac grill affixed to the wall behind the bar and an industrial air to the whole joint that makes you think a couple tons of Detroit steel could roar right through the bay doors into the dining room.

Yes, the Garage Taco Bar is typical of the entrepreneurial ingenuity happening all over Binghamton. After stints in Philly and NYC, Sharp decided a few years ago that he had to be a part of the irresistible revival happening in his hometown.

“It’s been such a great privilege to see the growth in the community that’s put so much blood, sweat, tears and grit into the area to make it what we want to be now,” Sharp says. “It’s not going to be what it was years ago, but we have the opportunity to build a new home.”

He’s right – Binghamton is less and less what it once was. But, that’s because of the creativity constantly being applied to the repurposing of what until recently were structures without a purpose.

The trailblazing Lost Dog Cafe wedged itself into a building that housed what was once among the largest cigar makers in the country. Remlik’s Grille & Oyster Bar, a premier city eatery, took up residence in the legendary (but empty) Kilmer Building.

“All these different restaurants aren’t just restaurants,” Sharp says. “They’re finding all these things they can contribute. “I think people are being really inventive in what they have here, the bones that are here, and figuring out how to make it work,” he says.
LEGACY AND CREATIVITY ARE THE KEY INGREDIENTS FOR GOOD EATS IN BING

Greater Binghamton’s diverse cuisine is an art form unlike any other thanks in part to the legacy created by immigrants of the early 20th century and today’s enthusiastic restauranteurs making a tasty name for BING.

We’ll start with our signature spiedies sandwich, a delicious adaptation imported from Italy. You’ll find the skewered meat delicacy at numerous Greater Binghamton eateries carrying the spiedies name, including Lupo’s.

BING is a place you can tour the world in a single weekend, pulling up a seat to enjoy Mediterranean-influenced fare at Citrea, Far East flare at Thai Time or classic Italian plates at Tony’s.

Step it up with the culinary creativity of Remlik’s, located in the historic Kilmer Building, or Number 5, the occupant of a former firehouse for more than 40 years. As the name implies, Food & Fire BBQ Taphouse combines all the essential elements for an excellent night out.

Scale back at intimate bistro’s like Antonio’s Bar & Trattoria or just grab a cup of great coffee at cafes like Strange Brew.

Even pub fare comes with its own originality in Binghamton. The Colonial is home to 21 beer taps and the 32-ounce “Bloody Marge” that includes mozzarella sticks, sliders, grilled cheese, bacon, wings and a veggie skewer. McGirk’s Irish Pub is another tavern that serves up classic beer friendly comfort food.

Whether you’re looking for local favorites with international influence, farm-to-table delicacies or just a great burger, you can find your own flavor in Greater Binghamton.

GOING ‘OFF THE GRID’ IN LITTLE ITALY

For locals, Oaks Inn has been around long enough that it needs no introduction. It doesn’t even need a website.

That’s because the way it draws its patrons is as old-school as the business itself. By word of happy mouths, they’ve managed to pretty much pack the place nightly. In fact, some customers have been coming for generations.

Black and white photos on the walls tell the Oaks story: the portrait of “Uncle Poppy,” a candid shot of suit-clad men reminiscent of a mobster flick and a photo of the bar with a sign boasting “refrigerated beer.”

If it weren’t for the color of the images, you would swear they were taken yesterday. Uncle Poppy’s passed away, but the tables are basically in the same place and the cash register behind the bar today probably rang up more than a few of those refrigerated beers.

And Oaks is still a gathering place. There are standing reservations for Friday nights. The hum of conversation and the clink of utensils on glass plates tell that story.

“Back when you could smoke in here, it would be smoky [at the end of the night],” Richard Cerasaro says. His father and uncle routinely smoked cigars during and after work. “Once in a while, you’ll get that whiff, because it’s permeated.

“Even though it’s been painted and cleaned, it’s still in the bones of it,” he says. “At the end of the night when everyone’s gone, sometimes I’ll just sit here and you can feel that energy pulsing.”

Cerasaro is a fourth-generation owner of the Inn. Built around the turn of the 19th century, it was a shoe store and, in an interesting twist, a pasta factory. For the past 85 years, it’s been a place to gather.

The restaurant is among the oldest in Greater Binghamton – all of them Italian. That’s one of the great legacies of the immigrants who came to work at Endicott-Johnson Shoe Co. There were many others – mostly Russian and Eastern European. But, what is still known as “Little Italy” is where the primary portion of Italians settled.

Today, Little Italy is more than a place to eat, although it does host a variety of culinary businesses from a third-generation bakery across the street from Oaks to an artisan cupcake maker just down the road.

Visitors can wander down the blocks and bump into a musical performance in the park or a festival thanks to a committee formed in part to support events in this classic neighborhood.

Little Italy has appealing geography for the adventurous foodie in the mood for fantastically classic dishes. This is happening all over Greater Binghamton as a younger generation of restauranteurs is getting back to their roots.

“All these younger people, they want to go back to the traditional,” Cerasaro says. “So, you’re seeing these places popping up that are more nationality-based. They’re wanting to do what they came from.”
Greater Binghamton is an easy-to-navigate, affordable destination for just about any culinary, cultural or “just curious” encounter you can have. Consider Clinton Street, aka Antique Row, one of the latter.

It’s a treasure hunt of sorts, but also the anchor for one of Binghamton’s many classic neighborhood experiences, complete with cafes, shops and community events.

“It has a certain elegance to it, but there’s an urban funk,” says Heidi Weeks, owner of the Mabel D. Orr fashion boutique. “It’s a colorful neighborhood and I wanted that. I wanted an eclectic mix in my neighborhood as well as my product.”

Once a destination for bar-hopping, Clinton Street is alive with plenty of shops, of course, but also cafes and even a giant retro arcade. For several decades, it’s been known best for antiques.

“It started a while ago where it was door-to-door-to-door antique stores. You could start at one end and fill up your car,” Weeks says. You can certainly still do that ... and a lot more.

“Everyone has their own ‘wonderful,’” she says. “If you have $5 to spend, you can find it on Clinton Street. If you have $1,000, you can find it on Clinton Street.”

“It just depends on what your wonderful is. And we have it,” Weeks says.

A stroll down Antique Row is an entertaining experience in and of itself. Business names range from the tongue-in-cheek Fickle My Fancy to the less subtle Old, Odd and Unique. Weeks can rattle off a list of “wonderful” from baseball cards to religious artifacts.

And, in most cases, if you can’t find it, the wonderful folks of Clinton Street will.

Weeks accommodates her eclectic tastes by combining vintage threads with more contemporary wardrobe and accessories. But, don’t dare call them “used.”

“I call my clothes previously loved instead of used and I think that’s what’s happening [in Binghamton],” Weeks says.
Back in the day, Binghamton was a well-known industrial powerhouse cranking out everything from shoes to high technology. Today, Binghamton brewers apply that tradition, pride and work ethic to carving a new niche for BING.

From international award-winning ales to bizarre-yet-delicious brews, beer is bringing Binghamton back in a big way.

Greater Binghamton born-and-bred father-and-son teams are handcrafting fantastic brews worthy of family tradition. Triple Cities natives have returned home to put some muscle back into dilapidated manufacturing centers and beauty back into once-gleaming storefronts.

Mike and Seth Weisel do farm-to-table right down to the pork products made from pigs that feast on their spent grains. It doesn’t get more local than that.

But, the Weisels and Galaxy Brewing Co. have gained recognition well beyond the borders of BING, earning silver in recent World Beer Cup competition.

Another father-and-son duo does some really interesting stuff nearby. The impressive collection of beers brewed by Zach and Eric Pedley at the North Brewery tend to push the limits.

The Pedleys routinely experiment with rare ingredients like rhubarb, lavender, watermelons, cucumbers and pretty much anything else that comes to mind. In addition to core favorites that resonate with the college crowd and connoisseurs alike, you can expect to find a fascinating tap in constant rotation on any given visit.

Water Street Brewing Co. brought foot traffic back to its namesake thanks to predominantly British and Bavarian styles made from local ingredients. John Bleichert perfected his craft in Germany and Chicago before opening Water Street with his wife, Michele.

Drinkers complement their Water Street suds with a farm-to-table menu sourced by 50-plus local producers.

Like-minded Beer Tree Brew Co. in Port Crane is committed to local ingredients, specifically the hops that are a legacy in this area. A farmer by trade, Chuck Rhoades strives to support the BING agricultural community with his family farm brewery.

Jason Gardner and Kristen Lyons keep the creativity flowing at Binghamton Brewing Co. (which is actually in nearby Johnson City). These Belgian specialists channel their engineering backgrounds into great beers they serve up in a former fire station.

The fantastically flipped and very hip tasting room is the frequent scene of friendly gatherings that feature live music and lively board game competition.

PERFECT PAIRINGS FOR A NIGHT OUT IN GREATER BINGHAMTON

Grab a bite before a show or sporting event at the Floyd L. Maines Veterans Memorial Arena.

The numerous agritourism attractions Binghamton offers include some of the best wineries, breweries and restaurants you can imagine. Work off a hearty meal with a stroll in the River Trail at dusk. This 1.5-mile paved trail connects Confluence and Cheri Lindsey parks – both perfect for couples to sit and enjoy the view of the Susquehanna and Chenango rivers.

If you’ve got an appetite for fine art, First Friday Art Walks include stops at the city’s most popular galleries each month. The Tri-Cities Opera complements those sights with world-class sounds that have been performed there for more than 70 years.

Minor league baseball has been a beloved Binghamton pastime for nearly a century. Outdoor lovers can embrace a different kind of nightlife by kicking their feet up under the warm fluorescent lights at a Binghamton Rumble Ponies game. For those who prefer colder temperatures, Binghamton Devils ice hockey is another fan favorite during the winter. Couple your game of choice with a nightcap and one of many tap-happy pubs.
Greater Binghamton built a reputation as a factory town, but that past also developed it into a family town. Industrial pioneers also served as benefactors of parks, museums and even carousels.

The Triple Cities tradition of quality family time, along with a commitment to educating and entertaining youth, dates back more than 140 years and still thrives today in attractions and events that appeal to all ages.

As the “Carousel Capital of the World,” our collection of antique merry-go-rounds will surely transport you to yesteryear.

Take a step – or spin, rather – back to a simpler time on six of Binghamton’s most unique features, which take residence in area parks that are just as beautiful as these lovingly restored, wood-carved relics of recreation.

Take the time to travel the circuit Memorial through Labor Day. Did we mention all of these are free?

They’ve actually been that way for more than 80 years thanks to legendary industrialist and philanthropist George F. Johnson of the Endicott-Johnson Shoe Co. E-J, as it was known, brought prominence (or notoriety) to the “Triple Cities” (Binghamton, Endicott and Johnson City) as an industrial powerhouse during the first half of the 20th century. It also set an incredible precedent for employee benefits, these morale-boosting carousels among them.

When BING buildings begin to light up, move around and tell the stories created by modern artists and tech-savvy pioneers, know that it’s not a hallucination nor a hoax. It’s Binghamton’s LUMA Fest.

“It’s like a magic trick. Intellectually there’s some sort of trick, but it’s still new enough to you that you can’t fully understand it on all levels,” said LUMA Operations Director Joshua Bernard Ludzki of one of the largest projection arts festivals in the country.

Tens of thousands of spectators from all over the world gather on the crowded streets of Binghamton after dark to take in this new digital art phenomenon, unsure of what to expect. A larger-than-life, projected clock counts down, the exhibit begins and the magic happens before their eyes in a spectacular way.

LUMA Fest artists from Barcelona to Budapest handpick their architectural canvases. Using projection mapping, live animations are created exclusively to suit the characteristics of these iconic buildings every September.

Inspired by the more advanced projection artists and festivals in Europe, Ludzki and co-founders Nick Rubenstein and Tice Lerner decided to reinvent the wheel by “building something that was uniquely Binghamton” – a festival for artists, by artists, that pioneered storytelling through projection mapping.

Despite the high technology, LUMA had humble beginnings. It’s a classic example the innovative legacy that still thrives in Greater Binghamton.

“We were developing the concept as we went. It was homegrown, grassroots. We didn’t have a big budget. The computers were donated and we discovered together how to pull it off,” said Ludzki.

In a few short years, what started on their apartment floors as a labyrinth of cardboard boxes and make-shift projectors has grown exponentially. It drew crowds of over 35,000 in the third year.

“We wanted to create something bold to draw a big crowd and show everyone what the BING art scene had to offer,” Ludzki said. And he certainly did.
Come out and play in Greater Binghamton! There are hundreds of places and thousands of acres to explore by foot, bike, boat or paddle.

Explore more than a dozen state forests, 78 parks or 77 miles of paddle friendly waters. From challenging trails to hike or bike to riverside strolls or picnics, you can go outside in any way, in every season, in Greater Binghamton.

Take a day hike among the many scenic acres of Chenango Valley State Park or enjoy a short loop around a Broome County park. From popular paths along the River Walk in the city to favorite rural escapes like Whitney Point, exploration by foot takes many forms in Greater Binghamton.

There’s no shortage of roads less traveled in BING. From the BMX biking at Cheri Lindsey Park to the many miles of mountain bike friendly trails, this is the place to pedal in New York’s Southern Tier. Road cyclists can cruise nearly 250 miles of routes.

The Susquehanna and Chenango rivers meet in Binghamton, where the waterfront is dotted with parks, trails and launches. Boaters and paddlers alike enjoy the calm waters of the Whitney Point Reservoir on the serene Otselic River.

Speaking of water, our numerous lakes, rivers and streams provide great fishing spots while more than 17,000 acres of state land make Broome County a hunting paradise. Head to a rod and gun club for some target practice or find some quiet fishing access on one our many rivers and ponds.

For those who prefer to simply view wildlife, numerous species call Greater Binghamton home and there are plenty of serene surroundings to get a good look. Take a walk through the woods by foot or go horseback riding at one of many stables in the area.

Our great outdoors provide good times in every season, even winter. Snowmobile and cross-country ski tracks and snowshoe prints pack the trails throughout Broome County. Skate outside at Chenango Valley State and Arnold parks or take it inside at the SUNY Broome and Chenango ice rinks.

Watched by millions of viewers, April the Giraffe of Animal Adventure Park in Harpursville quickly became a social media phenomenon. This overnight sensation and local celebrity put Greater Binghamton on the map in a major way.

After the live feed of Tajiri’s birth began in February 2017, it became the second most-watched live-stream video in YouTube history with over 232 million views and 7.6 billion minutes of live watch time.

Visitors have flocked in big numbers to see them live. Come meet the area’s very own Internet star for yourself and visit the world-famous giraffe and her baby calf.

Animal Adventure Park Founder Jordan Patch bought the 20-acre sloping stretch of land on the outer part of Broome County in 2013 and did not expect the park to take off the way it has. He knew that the addition of a giraffe would signify great success – and, boy, was he right!

Golf

If golf doesn’t come to mind when you think of Greater Binghamton, think again. More than a dozen courses make golf a favorite pastime here for pros and amateurs alike. In fact, our scenic greens host PGA tour events and earn great ratings from golf’s top publications, which means you can golf like a pro for a fraction of the price.

No matter your handicap, you can relax with classic rounds at Traditions at the Glen or tee up at En-Joie Golf Club, host to the PGA Tour Champions. Challenge yourself at the Golf Digest-rated Conklin Players Club or Golf Magazine-ranked Links at Hiawatha Landing.

Time your trip right and you can hit one of the area’s biggest events — golf or otherwise — in the region: the Dick’s Sporting Goods Open. Each July, the PGA stars come out to play at the historic En-Joie Golf Club and visitors come to enjoy week-long festivities that include a marquee concert performance.

For more than a decade, En-Joie Golf Club in Endicott has hosted the multi-award-winning PGA Tour Champions’ Dick’s Sporting Goods Open, a true staple in our community’s traditions. This event is one of the most elite tournaments on the Champions Tour.

A touch of Greater Binghamton’s history and culture ties into this event as well. The course, which was originally built by George F. Johnson, co-founder of the Endicott-Johnson Shoe Co., was created as a place for recreation for factory employees.

It has since become a destination for pro golfers and champions like John Daly, Tom Kite, Brad Faxon, Joey Sindelar and Craig Stadler, to name a few. En-Joie boasts between 5,150 and 7,030 yards with four sets of tees that serve as a true test for golfers of all skill levels.

A combination of golf and a major concert entice locals and surrounding communities to see what this event is all about. Past performers include Florida Georgia Line, Zac Brown Band, Lady Antebellum, Maroon 5, Tim McGraw and Bon Jovi.
Find any sport in every season in Binghamton, where we have nearly a century of experience hosting pro, amateur, national and local teams and tournaments.

Our rich sports tradition stretches back to the Bingos ball club at the turn of the century and the Triplets of the 1920s, when many in our bustling city took time out for an afternoon at the diamond. Today, the Binghamton Rumble Ponies play 71 home games each year at NYSEG Stadium downtown.

In the colder months, catch one of the American Hockey League’s most competitive programs in the Binghamton Devils. Binghamton University fields NCAA Division I teams in every sport, including the popular Bearcats basketball program that entertains throughout the winter.

Whether you’re a spectator or a player, Greater Binghamton is paradise for sports fans. We host sporting events from the local level all the way to the national sports stage. The Empire State Games Summer Games; Special Olympics New York Spring, Summer and Fall Games; STOP DWI Tournament of Champions (softball); New York Cup Gymnastics; John Mack Memorial Lacrosse Tournament; and the NYSPHSAA State Championships in Track & Field, Baseball, Basketball and Field Hockey are just a few of the main events that have competed here throughout the years.

If you love sports as much as we do, BING has you covered in any season. Just check the schedule, buy a ticket and settle in for some exciting action at every level and in great venues.
